This year, P2S—The Paddle Sports Show— saw a great wave of optimism despite the challenging economic situation of all industry players chasing the aftermath of the Covid boom. Sales may still be below predictions or all-time highs, but hope is the word.

"HOPE IN OUR CAPACITY TO MOVE FORWARD, TO WITNESS OUR SPORTS REACHING NEW LEVELS OF VISIBILITY, ACCESSIBILITY, AND IMPACT ON PUBLIC CONSCIOUSNESS."

Hope in our capacity to move forward, to witness our sports reaching new levels of visibility, accessibility, and impact on public consciousness. The hope needed to create industry-wide virtuous circles, making our production greener and reducing our environmental footprint. Hope for continued innovations in products and technologies. Hope to include even more people in the magic of paddling. Hope to help inspire the next era of evolution in our respective disciplines and industry as a whole.

foundation. We welcome all those who find their way to these pages to take part.

INTERVIEW: DAVID BAIN – NRS X PYRANHA

There was big news at the Paddle Sports Show this year, with NRS and Pyranha announcing a new strategic partnership combining sales and marketing initiatives to expand the impact of two companies at the forefront of the global paddle sports market. This partnership will see NRS' European sales, marketing, and customer service operations move to the newly expanded Pyranha headquarters in Runcorn, United Kingdom. The two brands will collaborate on customer service, dealer visits, field events, and marketing initiatives to better support their respective retail and outfitter networks. We met with Pyranha's new Commercial Director, David Bain, to learn more.

PG24: David, Pyranha and NRS recently announced an exciting new partnership that places you in a central role—congratulations. Can you tell us more about the motivation driving this decision?

DB: At the heart of this strategic partnership is the ability of both companies, NRS and Pyranha, to increase the effectiveness of our businesses and help retailers grow theirs. The opportunity for the two brands to work together in Europe allows us to offer the paddling community a gold-medal standard of customer service and availability alongside industry-leading product lines.

PG24: You have been NRS since its beginnings in Europe. What will your position be at Pyranha, and how will your new role impact your responsibilities with NRS?

DB: Whilst my title has changed from NRS European Sales and Marketing Agent to Commercial Director at Pyranha Mouldings, I have one job, and that is to support our team (which now includes a few key—and wonderful) people at NRS, our product lines, and our customers at Pyranha. My role as Commercial Director includes

“BILL PARKS OF NRS AND

COMPANIES FOUNDED IN
TEAMWORK AND A STRONG
PASSION FOR PADDLING; A HOME TRUTH AND LESSON

overseeing this strategic partnership, and the obligations that Pyranha has. I'll continue working closely with NRS USA to maintain the global vision for NRS and guide NRS Europe with the support of Pyranha's dedicated teams of paddle sport-loving people.

PG24: There is no better person to take on this role, given your experience in the industry and longstanding relationship with both companies. What are your thoughts on the partnership and what it can achieve?

DB: Thanks for the vote of confidence! I certainly think the partnership is a smart move; bringing these two leading companies together is too good an opportunity to be missed. It's an exciting new chapter, and I'm thrilled to take on the role of Commercial Director and continue working with two brands that have known me since the age of 15. It's nice to think I have something to offer both Pyranha and NRS and can help make this partnership possible. What lies ahead is incredibly promising, and I am genuinely excited about the future of paddle sports. More people are embracing the water than ever before, and working with two companies that will help shape that future is a privilege. With that said, this partnership is about much more than the excitement or vision of any one person.

PG24: What is the single biggest advantage you see to this strategic partnership?

DB: Expanded teams of experienced and dedicated paddle sports lovers in charge of customer service, sales, and marketing, all operating within the European time zone, focused on the needs of the European market. We hope this additional support gives retailers the confidence to work with NRS and Pyranha to support their businesses and commercial success. Anything else that happens along the way is all good and part of the adventure.

PG24: Will some of the Pyranha staff now be working for NRS, or will NRS customers be working with Pyranha staff?

DB: Pyranha will provide all the support services traditionally required, overseen by me. We have made team adjustments to accommodate this and improve the buying and selling experience for existing NRS customers.

PG24: Will NRS and Pyranha also be sharing distribution channels or collaborating on other initiatives?

DB: No, there is no distribution arrangement. NRS and Pyranha will continue to send products through their own channels, and NRS will continue to store and distribute products out of the Netherlands. The partnership only extends to aspects that involve communications, relationships, and building reliability for our customers: Sales, Marketing, and Customer Service activities. Again, the distribution of the two companies and the invoicing remains completely separate.

PG24: What will be the added value for end consumers and paddlers?

DB: By improving our availability, communications, and service, retailers will be better positioned to support the end consumer with the Pyranha and NRS products they love. Of course, we also love to attend events and spend time on the ground —after all, most events involve paddling—and hope to support as many as possible, the real benefit to paddlers on the ground will be led by our retail and commercial partners.

PG24: Will this collaboration increase access to new markets?

DB: Both NRS and Pyranha are committed to supporting our vast network of existing retail outlets, be it within the outdoor recreation, specialist paddlesport enthusiasts, or commercial use markets. Retailers are the foundation for a strong industry, and our support is unwavering. That said, we know there are areas where we can improve our distribution through availability and product suitability, and of course, evolving how we support these key geographical and market areas is critical for the future.

PG24: Is there a chance we'll see NRS distribute Pyranha products in North America in the future?

DB: Pyranha US has been hugely successful, and is an integral part of Pyranha's business. Chris Hipgrave, Mike Patterson, and the entire US team have been key to this success. We don't see any changes to our US distribution in the pipeline— although we have some hugely exciting developments led by Pyranha US for Canada, which will make boats far more readily available to the paddlers we know have been longing for our Pyranha and P&H ranges.

PG24: How do you see the values of Pyranha and NRS aligning, historically and in terms of goals for the future of the European paddle sport market?

DB: NRS and Pyranha, while many miles apart, have many similarities. Bill Parks of NRS and Graham Mackereth built companies founded in teamwork and a strong passion for paddling, with an ethos to create industry-leading products and put the community first. This home truth is still held close to everything we look to do. Both companies are always looking to improve the sport for the people in it, including the NRS and Pyranha employees who enjoy their spare time on the water. Both brands already serve retailers across Europe, and share the goals to always support customers to the best of our ability and bolster the industry with community empowerment and the very best products on the market.

PG24: NRS and Pyranha have traditionally promoted sustainability initiatives, community events, and environmental non-profits. Will this remain a focus in the future?

DB: Absolutely. Supporting NGO partners, be they environmental or community-focused, is supporting the industry we love. Whilst cash injection is incredibly important for NGOs to operate, the partnership will also allow us to use our vast communications channels to amplify our partners' messages, hopefully allowing them greater impact and success with their goals.

PG24: So, what is the plan for 2024? What is the long-term goal for NRS, Pyranha, and for this new partnership? How do you feel about the future?

DB: The last few years have been a rollercoaster for our industry, with highs and lows. We see a bright future, though, with a strong industry that we are grateful to be part of. This dynamic environment is what makes working in paddlesports exhilarating. As we enter the 2024 season, Pyranha and NRS will continue launching groundbreaking products—lots are in the works already!—and using this partnership to improve paddler experiences and enjoyment on the water and off.

PG24: Is there anything you hope to achieve as Commercial Director?

DB: As Commercial Director, my attention is consistently directed towards creating a business that enhances the overall experience of those who spend time on the water in our products and contributing to the growth and sustainability of our own business, and the paddle sports industry as a whole. My core focus remains supporting Pyranha in all we do, while looking critically at how our business can actively support and contribute to the paddle sports community, whether that's overseeing the success of this partnership, collaborating with non-profits to dismantle entry barriers within our sport, engaging in environmental initiatives, participating in events that ignite enthusiasm within the industry, or crafting a diverse range of products to meet the varied needs of paddlers.

PG24: Does that mean you are on the hunt for new staff?

DB: The hunt, maybe not, but we are always keen to hear from people who want to partner or work with us, from a young ambassador, which is where I began with both brands, to anyone who feels like the paddle sports industry is the right place for them and their future. You know where we are.

“AT THE HEART OF THIS STRATEGIC PARTNERSHIP IS THE ABILITY OF BOTH COMPANIES, NRS AND PYRANHA, TO INCREASE THE EFFECTIVENESS OF OUR BUSINESSES AND HELP RETAILERS GROW THEIRS.”

ONE STEP CLOSER: CREATING A VIRTUOUS CIRCLE

Can paddle sports create a dealer-based system where used and end-of-life gear are recycled into usable materials?

For all our efforts toward sustainability, the paddle sports industry exists alongside an ugly truth. We leave a massive environmental footprint, from plastic waste and carbon emissions transporting and manufacturing goods to products whose life cycle ends, more often than not, at a landfill. Rather than accept this as fact, more are asking: What are we going to do about it?

Production and design

This year at the Paddle Sports Show in Strasbourg, there was growing interest in creating an effective "virtuous circle," with brands and dealers uniting to discuss pathways to recycle end-of-life products into raw materials, which can be used to create new items for purchase. Topping industry-wide advances in sustainable construction and design was Peak Paddlesports' "Circular Ready" line and concept, products designed to be deconstructed and returned at the end of life to usable raw materials rather than a landfill. It's an exciting taste of what the future could hold.

Collection and processing

One solution to facilitate recycling end-of-life products involves dealers as intermediaries who can collect and return items to manufacturers or send them to external partners. Discussion at the Paddle Sports Show made it clear that placing the dealer in a central role adds value for manufacturers and dealers alike. In addition to strengthening existing networks and relationships, a dealer-based solution has the potential to drive sales and encourage repeat business as customers return used products and buy new ones. Additionally, the more participation in such a system is celebrated or rewarded, the more not partaking risks damaging reputation and sales.

"THE QUESTION IS NOW LONGER HOW MUCH THE EXTRA COST WILL BE... THE QUESTION IS HOW MUCH LONGER CAN WE—THE PADDLE INDUSTRY—ESCAPE OUR RESPONSIBILITIES?"

"Consumers increasingly value longevity and eco-resilient manufacturing processes and materials and recognize the detrimental environmental effects caused by products that routinely need replacement," points out Jason Eccles, President of Aqua Bound and Bending Branches. This realization has led to new technologies for Aqua Bound, including their Lam-Lok™ blade construction, as seen in Strasbourg.

RTM & Dag Kayaks have been recycling old boats and plastics wastes for some years now, as have others in the industry.

Another benefit to using established dealer networks is an accelerated pathway to reduce plastic waste. Introducing reusable transport bags for boards and kayaks that can travel between dealers and manufacturers or be used to collect products for recycling "could reduce plastic pollution by five kilos per kayak," asserts Bob Timms, who helped lead and organize the "The Virtuous Paddle Sports Recycling Chain" conference at the 2023 Paddle Sports Show.

Brands such as Rab, The North Face, and fashion giant H&M have initiated similar systems with take-back boxes available at limited retailers. Others, like Teva, accept products via mail, covering the cost of shipping to recycling partners or rewarding customers with credit towards future goods. "Lots of (paddle sport) manufacturers have these initiatives, but they're not being recognized enough," points out Lotta Lettmann.

Currently, Peak's Circular Ready line can be returned to Peak Paddlesports in person or via mail. Peak will separate the components and send them to their recycling partners for processing. Many kayak companies, such as RotoAttivo, Lettmann, and Liquid Logic, offer recycling options for boats made of LDPE and HDPE. "Not Sure What to Do with Your Trashed Boat? Let Us Recycle it!" exclaims Liquid Logic's website. "Return your old kayaks and canoes to Roto. We can recycle them and produce new products. You will save nature and receive discounts," promotes Roto.

Still, "most paddlesports products are currently not easily re-purposed by the manufacturers," reminds Palm Equipment Marketing Manager Paul Robertson. Rather than having manufacturers invest in building facilities, partnering with third parties who can help separate parts and transform them for their next phase of life seems prudent—and a great place to start.

Further inspiration can be found in the success of ski giant Technica, which has collected and upcycled more than 4000 pairs of ski boots since launching the "Recycle Your Boots" program in 2021. Retailers played a crucial role in Technica's success by raising awareness of the campaign and collecting boots, later delivered to a collection center in Italy via a dedicated transportation system. The collected boots are broken down into useable raw materials and sent to different partners for use in various products, from ski boots to crash pads.

A perfect solution? Maybe. Maybe not. Having manufacturers cover the cost of recycling or transportation to recycling centers effectively gives dealers larger margins. However, fully shouldering the cost of getting heavier, bulkier items to appropriate recycling facilities "would raise the price and drive down profitability or make some items less desirable," cautions Miha Rausl of Sipa Boards. The burden on the manufacturer could be significant, especially considering the potential added cost of sourcing recyclable materials and modifying product design without sacrificing quality. Creating incentives and making the system as convenient as possible remain important, from facilitating collection networks to reduce the cost of transporting and processing goods to convincing consumers to pay more for items that do good and manufacturers to take responsibility for the lifespan of their products.

But make no mistake. The question is no longer how much the extra cost will be, nor is cost an excuse. The question is how much longer can we—the paddle industry—escape our responsibilities? The Earth is at a critical juncture. Even with advances in sustainable materials and support for environmental initiatives, the paddle industry's impact on the planet is undeniable, and people are starting to notice. We need to initiate change now. Before our "ugly truth" and environmental impact drive customers away or turn them against us. Before we no longer are seen as promoting and protecting the outdoors but polluting them. Before we are seen not as proactive, but as unable to act.

"MOST PADDLESPTS PRODUCTS ARE CURRENTLY NOT EASILY RE-PURPOSED BY THE MANUFACTURER."

The ultimate goal is to create a true virtuous circle, where everything we produce is 100% "green," made from sustainable materials that can be recycled and repurposed so that nothing ends up in a landfill. It is not as impossible as we think. The industry has already taken steps toward reaching this goal as individuals. The next step requires collective effort and a strong network of dealers and manufacturers. It's a big job, but the first step is to start. The cycle may evolve as we develop new technology, but we will always need to finish what we started and take ownership of our mess. There is no alternative for the planet or the paddle sports industry. Who's in?

FROM BIG WATER TO THE BIG TIME

With increased visibility for paddle sports in mainstream arenas comes surprising new opportunities and potential.

Lately, paddle sports are visible everywhere you look. Celebrities do it. Paddleboards, kayaks, and canoes feature in advertisements ranging from trucks and alcohol to life insurance and financing family vacations. Instead of needing a specialty store, entry-level products are sold at the supermarket.

It's undeniable that paddle sports have reached the mainstream, becoming synonymous with an adventurous lifestyle. It's a development that benefits the entire industry. The more visible paddle sports become, the more paddling culture seeps into the public consciousness, laying the foundation for good things to come that go far beyond participation numbers alone.

"We have the interest of the masses; now we need to convert that interest into passion," says NRS CMO Mark Deming. For Deming, passion doesn't need to dominate a user's outdoor life. Even holding one-third of a person's time, attention, and budget places paddlesports in a position to compete with snow sports, cycling, climbing, backpacking, etc. "Essentially, our job is to make paddling a third of an outdoors person's recreational mix, a third of their garage or gear closet, a third of a person's spending on gear."

With paddling's increasing popularity and visibility comes new avenues for revenue and the chance to broaden brand reach with crossover and lifestyle goods, from base layers to accessories and changing ponchos. According to The Daily at Outdoor Retailer in February 2023, while hard goods sales are down, sales of water sports accessories such as booties, helmets, gloves, and hoods are up. Dry gear sales also showed a significant increase, combining for millions in sales.

Just as boardshorts brought surfing's sun-soaked, laid-back style to the larger world, items iconic to paddling culture, whether sun hoodies or dry bags, are finding homes on dry land. Take Teva, whose flagship sandal originated on the Grand Canyon of the Colorado River, and who used the ethos "freedom to roam" to become a globally-recognized footwear brand. With surf companies like Roxy and RipCurl successfully bridging the gap between core surf culture and mainstream fashion, it stands to reason that paddling brands are poised to do the same, selling not just technical gear but paddling lifestyle and culture.

It's not just paddling; the entire outdoors is having a mainstream moment. Fleece has become fashionable. Metal water bottles are everywhere. Gucci collaborated with The North Face, and Prada recently partnered with Red Bull (who has their own fashion label, Alpha Tauri) to make whitewater kayaker Aniol Serrasolses' descent of waterfalls flowing off the Svalbard glacier possible—a feat shared on major international news channels.

As mainstream news, Aniol's feat inspired awe on a global scale. The Svalbard Project, which was partly inspired by climate change and the rapid melting of the glaciers, showcased another benefit of mainstream exposure. The more people see paddling, the greater the platform for the environmental issues our waterways face, whether or not that exposure drives people to paddle or drives sales.

"THE MORE VISIBLE THEY BECOME, THE MORE PADDLING CULTURE SEEPS INTO THE PUBLIC CONSCIOUSNESS, LAYING THE FOUNDATION FOR GOOD THINGS TO COME THAT GO FAR BEYOND PARTICIPATION NUMBERS ALONE."

As exciting as it is to see missions like Svalbard featured on mainstream news channels, the extreme side of paddle sports is often more intimidating than encouraging. To truly capitalize on this exposure and drive more people to try paddle sports, we need subtler, smaller promotions that make anybody feel they could enjoy a day out on the water—no glaciers needed. Getting everybody, anybody, to think about trying paddle sports will be the true mark of making it to the mainstream.

While some still confuse "paddle sports" with pickleball, we've come a long way. The foundation is there for continued growth, and it's hard not to be optimistic about the future. Our community is growing, welcoming a wider variety of users. Our gear is improving in comfort and technical performance, and our exposure is helping more people than ever realize paddling exists—and it's fun! Sure, no matter how many advertisements feature paddling, the inherent risk of watersports means it may never be seen as accessible as hiking or biking for the majority of outdoor enthusiasts, but this isn't necessarily a disadvantage.

The allure of paddle sports lies in the spirit of exploration, celebrating the beauty of nature, embracing the freedom of the outdoors, and connecting to something bigger than ourselves. With only a few strokes, paddling takes you truly somewhere different, allowing access to the heart of nature even in the midst of a major city. It's why paddling—SUP, sea kayaking, whitewater, even casual touring—now often stands in for the idea of adventure rather than hiking, biking, or even surfing.

Whatever comes of our increased visibility, be it more paddlers, new opportunities for revenue, or global brand domination, to be an accepted, normalized outdoor activity promoting a passion for the outdoors while empowering adventure and the protection of our wild places in the public sphere is a milestone worth celebrating.

EMBRACING E-VOLUTION

With more options and better paddle-assist technology, there couldn't be a better time for paddle sports to embrace the E-revolution.

Paddle sports have long given a way to be in nature's thrall, to find that magic moment where all that matters is your next stroke. When it is just you and the water, the only sound a huff of breath and the echo of a paddle's cadence. Lately, there is a new sound: a gentle hum and buzz as paddle sports rapidly embrace an E-revolution.

The growing interest in paddle-assisted technology was evident this year at the 2023 Paddle Sports Show in Strasbourg, France, as increasing numbers of brands joined established pioneers in exhibiting refined designs for motors large and small. Czech company eMOGI showcased the recreational and rescue benefits of their composite Aluki kayak. F-One debuted their new e-fin and spoke of developing technology that would allow the motor to gauge when assistance was needed. Bote Boards blend the power of a motorized fishing boat with a stand-up paddleboard feel in their Micro Skiff line, while Native Watercraft's award-winning Propel TitanX comes "electronic-ready," recognizing that the ability to add a motor makes kayak fishing accessible for even more anglers.

Brands such as Take Outdoors, Coastco, and SIPA Boards have long recognized the potential of motorized paddleboards and kayaks and have already put work into developing innovations. As electric technology continues to improve, this corner of the market will only grow, bringing greater versatility, appeal, and adaptability to all paddle sport disciplines. Among those set to benefit most? The young, the elderly, and those who lack the skill or fitness to handle the physical demands of paddling, from changing conditions to upper body strength.

"If {motorized paddle sports} democratizes paddling and allows people of different ages, abilities, and fitness levels to enter, participate, and grow their skill sets," says Miha Rausl of Sipa Boards. Paddle-assist technology makes hauling gear or kids easier and enables safer and more enjoyable paddling experiences for people with disabilities or limited mobility, including older adults. This increased accessibility provides a critical access point as the industry looks to diversify further, targeting those who currently find paddling too difficult or daunting.

"I think it {paddle-assistive technology} can be a good upsell or add-on and bring in more users and new customers into the sport for sure, especially those willing to spend more for more luxury and convenience on the water," says Graham Ketcheson of Kayak Distribution. Given battery systems can cost as much as a boat or board, paddle-assistive technology is a much-needed boost when sales are tough.

"If it makes being self-powered less intimidating for people to get into it {paddle sports}, I see it as a plus," says Jackson Kayak Marketing Director Emily Jackson. It's worth remembering that not all users need to purchase boats or boards. The higher cost and current novelty factor of motorized paddle sports may drive business to rental shops, tour services, and retailers.

"In the US, e-bikes are outselling classic bikes by huge margins," continues Miha. "A little bit of boost can make a huge difference and with uphill cycling now becoming a thing for families, the industry is starting to boom." Equally intriguing are opportunities for those looking to go further or faster. For the fitness-inspired, the power boost doesn't change how hard you work, only how far or fast you can go within a given timeframe.

Despite the versatility and appeal, conflict in the cycling industry indicates that not everyone is equally entranced. For all the advantages, e-powered paddle craft detracts from what many feel lies at the heart of their paddling discipline: A retreat to nature, the ability to be truly present, to connect with the elements.

"For Starboard, our core and focus is on using the energy of the wind, wave and your own strength to promote an active lifestyle. We have not moved into E-drive related products as it doesn't fit with our core principles and we feel it detracts away from the authenticity of our sports," explains Starboard SUP Brand Manager Ollie O'Reilly.

Though e-technology will attract new users, more paddlers also mean a greater impact on our waterways and access points, whether trash, noise, or crowds. Other concerns center around the experience of other users and environmental impact. An advantage of non-motorized kayaks and paddleboards is the ability to navigate sensitive ecosystems with minimal disturbance and harm to aquatic environments.

Whether the joy paddle sports bring feels compromised or complemented by electric-assisted technology, it won't go away any time soon—or at all. Rather, expect innovations in user-friendly designs, lighter-weight materials, and longer-lasting batteries. As e-technology improves, it will continue to drive interest in paddle sports, bringing much-needed numbers and a broader range of participants. However, as numbers grow, so does the need for infrastructure and education on best sport practices so that making paddle sports more inviting doesn't isolate those already here.

All are entitled to time on the water, no matter how they access it. Making paddle sports accessible and enjoyable to as many as possible should always be the ultimate goal. In this sense, E-technology is a gift we are ready to embrace.

INVEST IN THE FUTURE

Rather than dismiss youth gear as “not cost-effective,” brands are realizing that making paddle sports accessible to kids is worth the risk.

Want a sport or habit to stick? Start young. Or so the saying goes. How many out on the water wish they had been introduced to paddling earlier? Ironically, ask those who began young about their early days on the water, and you'll likely hear “cold,” “awkward,” and “uncomfortable.”

Generally speaking, the kid's market has been considered too small, too risky, and not cost-effective enough to merit significant attention or development. Few parents were willing to invest in expensive, specialized items for children that would outgrow them quickly. Rather than bring their kids on the water, many let paddling fall by the wayside in favor of more “family-friendly” activities.

Recently, that has begun to change, with more brand owners becoming parents and families flocking to paddle sports in search of a fun outdoor activity for the whole family. More, an entire generation of active paddlers are becoming parents who want to share their passion with their kids—and they need gear to do it.

Call it selfish or smart; you don't have to be a parent to realize this is a market worth investing in. “Our growth and future depend on youngsters getting into the sport. The products they're using play a huge part in their first impression and experience,” acknowledges Lotta Lettmann, the third generation of a paddling family and Marketing Manager for Level Six. Paddlers know paddling is a great way to create core memories and explore personal limits and new destinations. Parents know a happy kid equals a happy parent. Gear that is comfortable and fits well goes a long way toward facilitating fun on the water, making everyone more likely to want to repeat the experience. “I think having gear that fits makes parents more comfortable taking kids on the water,” says Jackson Kayak Marketing Director and mom of two Emily Jackson.

While most youth will start by sharing a boat or on the board with parents, investing in equipment kids can paddle themselves adds to the fun and is critical for skill development. “Offering gear better suited to children/smaller paddlers encourages independence and participation from a young age. In seeing my four-year-old son's eyes light up when he first held a 'tiny canoe paddle,' I witnessed a shift in his realization that paddling is something he can actively engage in, says Luanne Koubsky, Creative Lead at Aqua Bound & Bending Branches.

Consider bikes and skis: Starting your kid out with a too-big bike or ski boots/skis is so clearly detrimental to having a good—and safe—experience it is laughable. Given the number of bike and ski companies with successful youth-specific lines and the increasing willingness of retailers to diversify youth offerings, it is almost surprising there aren't already more options in paddle sports. After all, kids are the perfect target audience. “If not children, then who is athletic and adventurous?” asks Lettmann.

At the 2023 Paddle Sports Show, Soul Waterman founder Corran Addison showed off videos of his son ripping in his latest whitewater kayak design. Aztron's Tony Yeung debuted an inflatable youth racing SUP. There were kid's carbon fiber surfskis at Vadja and numerous other advancements. But youth equipment doesn't need to be ultra-elite or performance driven. “Parents mostly just want to know their kids are happy, are not exposed to huge risks; and that they are getting good value. Kids want to just have fun,” says Palm Equipment Marketing & Brand Manager Paul Robertson. “Simple, functional products,” agrees Jackson. “Medium-end is key.”

Durability and price point are crucial factors in making paddle sports accessible for families. Developing trade-in programs or gear that can grow with kids reduces the perceived cost and extends use over multiple years. Items hardy enough to hand down or sell when they no longer fit also help make investing in kid's gear less risky and more cost-effective for manufacturers and consumers alike.

“Kids kit isn't just a short-term growth strategy, it's hugely important for us all to ensure there are future participants,” reminds Robertson. Kid-specific gear lets the next generation improve at paddling much quicker and at younger ages than before, creating a healthy—and hopefully long-lasting—relationship with a brand and a love of paddle sports. It also lets the industry maintain the paddlers that are already here. “It's 100% worth the investment even if the return on investment might not be realized for a decade to come,” agrees US Sales Director Chris Hipgrave.

There is no shortage of young guns out there ripping already. At Peak Paddlesports, what started as a niche desire to share the river with his kids has evolved into something much more for founder Pete Astles. “Hopefully, these youngsters will become lifelong paddlers. Some will be future champions and river advocates, and some will become parents themselves, perhaps continuing the paddling circle for another generation.”

ONE STROKE AT A TIME: THE SLOW(ER) BUT STEADY BEAT OF SUP

An oversaturated market and overstocked shelves won't last forever. SUP sales are slowing, but SUP is far dead.

Over the past twenty years, SUP has taken the paddling world by storm, growing exponentially and attracting countless enthusiasts. Every year, there were more manufacturers, paddlers, and interest. It seemed too good to be true, and we knew it wouldn't last forever. Sure enough, SUP's meteoric rise slowly imploded in the wake of a Covid boom, leaving dealers overstocked and the market oversaturated. But don't be fooled into thinking this is the end. While things have slowed, they have not stopped.

Like the rest of the industry, SUP brands are experiencing overstock due to Covid-induced production lags, a situation compounded by the overwhelming market saturation of entry-level boards, particularly inflatables. Yes, boards are still selling, but smaller margins and reduced prices through retailers like bigger box stores and online discounters. Increasing shipping, storage, manufacturing costs, and anticipated outcomes of the Ukrainian war and inflation further reduce margins, falsely equating less profitable with less popular.

If you look to the water, SUP appears as in demand as ever. The hypothetical debut of SUP racing in the 2028 Olympic Games has fostered the growth of clubs and developmental programs and encouraged more brands to invest in developing racing boards for amateurs and professionals. The 2023 ICF World Championships in Thailand had nearly 1000 paddlers participate, showing a thriving racing scene. The ISA Worlds also had a great turnout of new and familiar faces, as did events such as the 2023 edition of France's GlAGla Race, which attracted hundreds of paddlers, amateur and pro alike. The Molokai to Oahu numbers were up in 2023, accompanied by growing interest in SUP foil downwinding. On the surf front, seeing a SUP or two or three in the lineup at nearly any break worldwide is not even a little surprising.

"MARKET PREDICTIONS SHOW PADDLEBOARDING CONTINUING TO GROW AT RATES BETWEEN 8-10% OVER THE NEXT 5-10 YEARS."

For casual recreationalists, SUP retains its reputation as the friendliest paddle sport, versatile enough to use in more urban areas or escape crowds and head deeper into the wilderness. Despite the oversaturation of entry-level products, sales are slowly creeping back up. "Personally, we have noticed an increase in sales in the medium-low range," says Massimo Vanzin of FreeBie SRL. Others note increased interest in hard boards or more specialized designs.

Adding foil-specific products to manufacturer lineups has generated fresh interest in multiple SUP disciplines, from downwinders to riding waves. Foiling's popularity might serve as a bridge and lure users from other surf and wind sports, such as surfing, windsurfing, and kite surfing, to enter the market.

SUP is also taking off in regions outside of Europe and North America. In addition to rising interest in China and India, a 2023 report on skyquest.com identified Japan and Indonesia as the fastest-growing markets between now and 2030. "We definitely see emerging markets in Asia on the rise," agrees Starboard Brand Manager Ollie O'Reilly, pointing out that the recent ICF World Championships in Thailand, China had over 100 paddlers competing; Indonesia secured a gold medal in the junior men's category, and competitors from India, Singapore, Korea, and Japan attended. China, in particular, is pushing to encourage people to get into SUP, a strategy paying off already, with over 1,300 participants in a recent race.

Having a plethora of boards available for cheap may even prove beneficial in the long run. "Buy cheap, buy twice" is becoming a more widely adopted strategy as SUP looks to exploit an oversaturated market. "Stock will clear out and the industry will remain about 20% bigger (in terms of users) in comparison to pre-Covid," posits Miha Rasul of SIPA boards. Many of these customers will slowly start buying better products, giving the brands that survive this phase a chance to compete in developing further innovation and building brand capital.

"As manufacturers, we need to reignite demand through innovation," says Mark Deming of NRS. Recent advancements in inflatable technologies have already led to stiffer, lighter boards shaped for performance. "With woven drop-stitch materials, like NRS Z-Blend, and new manufacturing techniques, designers can work in three dimensions to create unique board profiles with specific performance characteristics," explains Deming. Innovations in technology and design, such as NRS's v-shaped hull, give the avid paddler a reason to upgrade while widening the gap between generic price-point SUPs and high-quality, high-performance boards.

Finding success in SUP has become a marathon rather than a sprint, and some brands may not survive the transition. It will take a splash of luck, a solid brand identity, active brand communication with support for athletes and events, and innovative products. But for those that do, the future is still promising. While the exact figures vary, market predictions show paddleboarding continuing to grow at rates between 8-10% over the next 5-10 years.

After all, with prices this low, there's never been a better time to try it.

DEALER PROFILE - KANUSCHULE VERSAM, SWITZERLAND

Located in the majestic "Swiss Grand Canyon" on the banks of the Upper Rhine River, Kanuschule Versam is a shop, kayak school, and rafting company. Currently celebrating 35 years in business with three passionate Swiss paddling legends behind the wheel - Marcus Keller, Kasi Felman, and Toro Rogenmoser - Kanuschule Versam is a leader on the European paddling scene. We talked to co-owner Toro Rogenmoser to learn more about KSV's ongoing success.

PGmag: You celebrate 35 years in business this year. Congratulations! How does it feel to have succeeded in your initial dream of making a living from your passion?

Toro Rogenmoser: It feels great. It's 35 Years for KSV but 25 for me; thanks for reminding me to celebrate!

PGmag: KSV is in Versam, Switzerland, near Ruinaulta on the Rhine River. What drew you to this location?

TR: The founders came here because of a great river, awesome scenery, and the unique opportunity to do train shuttles, which allows kayaking to be less motor-reliant.

PGmag: We hear the three of you still paddle all year round. Is a passion for paddling the recipe for success?

TR: Yes, we still paddle all year round, but to varying degrees. I think the recipe is to be deeply embedded into what you do: Try to be better at it every day. Know the field, know what's happening. Being passionate doesn't mean you HAVE to be on the water all the time. And focus on a specialty. For us, it's whitewater.

PGmag: Describe the nature of the Kanu Schule (kayak school). What is the spirit your programs aim to develop?

TR: We focus on whitewater kayaking and canoeing. It's born out of our hobby, and our love for the sport is also the spirit communicated. We try to teach students to be safe, passionate, and caring.

PGmag: What is the rough percentage split between all three activities—kayaking, canoeing, and rafting—in terms of revenue?

TR: Roughly, all three parts are similarly big. The difference lies more in how the revenue relates to other parameters. For example, the shop takes the biggest upfront investment (inventory), and the school needs the most human power, aka teachers. But we look at the overall package, not single numbers.

PGmag: Why did KSV expand to include a retail shop? Was it a financial necessity or a more service-driven initiative?

TR: The retail store opened in 1994, so that was a bit before my time, but it grew naturally from buying gear for ourselves to having a few items for our customers.

It started with a handful of items and slowly grew because it made sense. One constant challenge: our available space seems to grow more slowly than the inventory...

PGmag: Have you seen any lasting changes in interest and business since Covid?

TR: Overall, we are back to—quite exactly—pre-Covid, which started with a big spike in online sales during lockdowns, followed by a peak summer for rafting and courses when people could not go abroad. With the shop, we have to manage a bit of overstock. We also now stock up record-early, an holdover from when we were sold out of many items and manufacturers were, too.

PGmag: How do you approach online sales? Do most customers ship products or pick up their orders at the shop?

TR: It's around 50/50 overall. In winter, it shifts to 99% online with shipping. We are basically located on the riverbank of one of the Rhine's most paddled sections in Switzerland, so we are the drive-in of kayak shops. We even put a plastic floor in the shop because paddlers often come in dripping wet!

PGmag: Who is your clientele? Are the demographics the same for the shop, rafting business, and kayak school?

TR: Overall, we have mostly Swiss clients. Interestingly, this is also true for rafting. Our rafting clients are people of all ages, individuals, companies, and clubs/associations. In the School, we have a gap between the ages for youth camps and when young people can pay for a course themselves. Maybe it's also the age where one feels most adventurous and ready to learn by trial and error.

"I PREFER A LONG (ISH) DRIVE TO A SHOW TO SEE EVERYTHING IN ONE PLACE OVER REPS COMING TO OUR PLACE TO PRESENT NEW PRODUCTS."

PGmag: Do any recent innovations excite you?

TR: For me, there's a stark contrast between the development in boats vs. gear. For boats, there's the shift in the predominant type/discipline to the current half-slice craze, but also big trends and changes within the disciplines, which really are exciting. But I am disappointed with the development of gear. The dry suit took over, but apart from that, I mainly see fashion-type changes rather than technical improvements. That may help something sell better, but it makes it harder for shops. Slight changes and fancy new names for colors and color schemes make for a lot of unwanted work in inventory and web software. I am more interested in practical features: Safety/visibility, wet-weight (how heavy am I after a swim?), durability, usability; these innovations may exist but aren't being promoted as much.

PGmag: We've seen you every year at the Paddle Sports Show and for 15 years before that at PaddleExpo. Will we see you again in Strasbourg?

TR: You will. Tradeshow are important. I prefer a long(ish) drive to a show to see everything in one place over reps coming to our place to present new products. I also like the social part of meeting people from the business and people I used to see in eddies. It's important to us to have one show, and not several different ones. We're happy that our entire whitewater niche is represented in one show.

HIKO - BABY V.2

Good enough is not good enough when it comes to safety gear. When it comes to safety gear for your child the best should be your only option. And this is how we approached the development of the Baby V.2 PFD. Because our own kids wear it. The body is built from 600 D Dupratex Polyester. It is stronger and more durable than previously used 200 D Oxford Nylon. Let your child slide those rocks! PE high flotation foam is resistant against pressure abuse and maintains its floatation for many years. The foam is distributed carefully between the front panels and floating collar to optimize its ability to turn your child head up away from the water. Consecutive piece of high-tension webbing runs all the way from the front of the life jacket, between the legs and up all the way to the collar where it is firmly attached forming a handle. This way you can quickly grab your child, guide it through critical areas or even lift your child up by the handle. High vis fluorescent orange fabric in combination with reflective elements make it easy to spot your child in conditions of lowered visibility - very useful when on the ocean or in dark. When they don't scream loud enough teach your child to use the built in whistle.
